TALES FROM THE

GREEK MYTHS

I am the salt on the palms of fishermen. I am the grooves on their weathered palms, raw from rowing. I am the love that people feel for the bounteous ocean, which is full of gifts for everyone who dares claim them. Yet I am also the dread and fear in the eyes of seamen, when the sea gets rough and threatens to consume their ships in its mighty waves, taking them to their watery grave. I am Poseidon. I am a true god, no need to be humble about it.

Educational material included

I am Poseidon. I am the salt on the faces of seafarers, the deep grooves in their hardened hands.
I am the love that people feel for the sea. I am also their fear and dread for the mighty waves that rock the boats. I'm not one to boast, but I am a powerful god.

*This series offers a new reading
